U.S. is ready to give up its legal claim to tiny Swan Islands, about 95 miles northeast of Honduras. But at least one American's strongly objecting. He's Major William T. Stovall (U.S. Army Retired), of Miami. He's visited the islands several times, says there are several fine beaches, good harbor, landing strip to accommodate DC-3's and would make "an ideal vacation spot for Americans." Ownership of Swan has been source of friction between the U.S. and Honduras for half a century. Had colorful history: pirate legends, guano mining operations, and anti-Castro CIA radio station, and a mini-invasion by 13 Hondurans.
